Model Business Now Specialized As Any Others

NEW YORK—It may never look like it on the surface, but modeling business is now as specialized as engineering. And the would-be model is advised before packing her suitcase for the trip to the big city to look at the various phases of modeling and decide what doors to knock upon.

First, naturally, is the glamorous fashion photographer model career, epitomized by Jean Patchett. Then there's the fashion show model, like Wendy Russell.

There are models in dress houses, like Peggy Porter.

And there are artists' models, like Leona Osborn.

Even-featured and beautiful Jean Patchett, 23, is currently riding the crest of the wave in her own division. Since last year (when her career started) she has been on five magazine covers and has lost count of the number of times she has been on the inside pages. She has taken airplane and boat jaunts to Southern and Northern climes for photography purposes. Her weekly pay is over $500.

Tops $500 Weekly

"If it ever drops below $500," she said, "I get worried and think maybe I'm through. Then I rush out and get a new hairdo or something."

She's an Eastern Shore Maryland girl whose ambition was to be a singer. But she was infected by the modeling bug, borrowed $3 some money from a disapproving family and hit New York.

She lives in a women's hotel, is careful about money and thinks, maybe, if she's smart and handles herself well, she'll last 10 years in the business.

"It's hard work," she says. "I haven't had a date for a week. You've got to take good care of yourself if you want to look fresh and attractive."

According to Jean, no one can teach you to be a model, it's something you can do or can't do.

"You have to have a feel for clothes, and be able to catch in your face the mood of a dress," she added.

Jean is at the top of her profession—only a handful of girls make that kind of money. Many hopefuls, who receive occasional jobs, are making coffe-and-cake money as saleswomen or clerical workers.

Showed New Technique

Pretty, vivacious Wendy Russell, a few years older than Jean, is one of the most popular fashion show models in the business—and it pays off during the fashion show season at a rate of about $400 a week. But the average model take, says Wendy, runs around $125.

When Wendy came to New York from Marshall, Tex., the fashion show model invariably was a coldly beautiful, bored girl who walked out and displayed clothes as though she were conferring a privilege upon the audience.

That wasn't Wendy's dish of tea. She ran out to the audience, looking pleased and excited as well as pretty. She sold clothes, and soon was in great demand. She thinks she started a new technique in her line.

Goat-Hating Vermonters Bar Woman, Stock From Homesite

BETHEL, Vt.—Goat hating Vermonters barred Mrs. Arthur Lamear and her wagon load of livestock from their waiting home when the 54-year old woman returned here from a 3,600-mile trip to Arkansas and back by prairie schooner.

As her covered wagon groaned into this Green Mountain village she left last year, Mrs. Lamear was greeted by an enthusiastic welcome from townsfolk—and an ultimatum from residents of near-by Royalton where she had planned to settle on a friend's farm.

"You can't come into Royalton with those goats," said the ultimatum delivered to Mrs. Lamear by a messenger when she halted her nanny-crammed wagon at noon on Bethel's main street.

Mrs. Lamear gave no sign of disappointment at being barred from the 60-acre Royalton Farm made available to her by Mrs. Eugene Fisher of Gowanda, N. Y.

Informed that several Royalton men were waiting at the town line to turn her back if she went that way, she started her wagon toward Camp Brook, some five miles out of the village, to seek refuge at the farm of a nephew.

"It's still wonderful to see the Green Mountains again," she said.

Mrs. Lamear began her 1,800-mile return trip July 5 when she left Hunt, Ark.

She drove the wagon to Arkansas last year in belief the climate there would speed her husband's recovery from injuries suffered in an automobile accident. When his health failed to improve, they decided to return to Vermont. He came north by bus and found work at Bryant, N. Y., while his wife made the trip by wagon.

PMA Notice

The State Office of the Production and Marketing Administration announced this week that the county and community committees, composed of farmers elected to administer PMA programs in local areas, will henceforth be known officially as Production and Marketing Administration Committees. They were previously known as Agricultural Conservation Committees. Their duties will remain unchanged.

This means that the local county farmer committee, of which Bennet Harding is chairman, will now be known as the Appomattox County PMA Committee instead of the "ACA" committee as was formerly the case. A similar change will apply in the name used to designate community farmer committees.

The change in name comes as a result of revised regulations pertaining to the selection and functions of county and community committees, approved last month by the Secretary of Agriculture, according to R. B. Bridgforth, State PMA Chairman.

Appomattox is a growing town.
